“ Memories of my brother flood into my mind, and even though his passing was peaceful and timely, my appreciation for him tears at my heart. He was a special person.

As poignant as my memories of him are, he was the one who could recount our childhood together. I remember Saturday mornings playing sandlot football; two young boys traveling alone together by greyhound bus from Washington to Georgia; Allan's loyal friendships. Allan remembered everything. Even late in life he could recall family happenings and people and places otherwise lost to me. That ability to recall the details of his whole life stayed with him until the end.

Allan made the most of life. He embraced life with enthusiasm, and had one passion after another. Two of his most enduring pleasures were family reunions and Christmas. He would start planning months and months in advance (and sometimes years), and enjoy every moment of anticipation.

The love of his life was his wife Marsha. She was the best thing to happen to Allan. And in his last years, Marsha was a tower of strength and a loving and dedicated caretaker.

Allan found joy in life, and brought light and happiness to every one around him.
