“ Pop was someone who was able to laugh and joke with you like he'd known you his whole life. He was a warm and welcoming person, and instantly made me feel like part of his ginormous family. One day, he walks up to me and says “hey smiley”. I said “why smiley?” He said “well because you're always walking around here smiling!” He then gave me a big smile and walked away. From then on, every time I'd walk in the house he'd give me a big smile or say “hey smiley!”... I'll forever miss seeing him in his chair smiling big at me.. He was a wonderful father, grand father, and great grand father, and will be missed so much by so many.

“ One of the funniest things I remember about Pop is on the nights when the other kids and I had got on Grams nerves and we couldn't get a snack before bed, this old man would tip toe in our rooms with a handful of robin eggs and just spread them on our bed. None of us knew how to react because nobody in the house liked robin eggs except for Pop, but we would be grateful and chomp away on some dry chocolate. Eventually we all came to look at him as a saint when it came to snack time. Until the next day when we got up for school and had to run through Gram and Pops room to get to the front door. I'd glance at that mans nightstand and what I see? Top shelf candy and chips far as the eye can see. I asked him once do you even like robin eggs, and with the goofiest smile on his face he said yes, but not as much as the stuff on my nightstand. I still find it so funny because I will not share the good snacks with anyone either. Everyone I tell that story to laughs so hard. I wouldn't have stories like this if it wasn't for him. He's the best dad I could've asked for. I'll miss him. I love you dad.
