“ Lori had the brightest personality, she was such a blessing to have as a friend. We spent every day talking about life and she had so much to look forward too. It breaks my heart that she won't get to experience everything that was in store for her and that she was taken from her family so soon. Lori was always a shoulder to lean on for so many people and the world won't be the same without her. We miss you every day Lori.

“ My Lori, a bright, loving and shining star. My Lori does not meet strangers, they are all her instant friends and to be loved and liked by her, is an awesome blessing. One of my favorite memories of Lori, she was about 4 or 5 and I sent her to her room for some mischief. Lori stated, "I wanted to go to my room, anyway." As her mom, I learned very quickly that negotiations were always your best choice with Lori. Lori, loves her husband, children and life, pulls everyone in to that loving circle. I understand, I am talking in the present tense, her essence is a blessing. Mom

I am so sorry for your loss. I'm just seeing this as I am not on fb much. I met Lori her first year of teaching and I remember her asking me how I got the inner city kids to obey cus they were terrible. I told her my secret instead of yelling stare them in the eyes and be firm , it worked and we both laughed. I will hold on to that moment forever. Missing my friend but makes no mistake.
