“ I knew Jake when he became a resident at the apartment community that I manage. From the time he moved in he would pop into the office a couple times a month and sit in my office and visit. Most times he would tell stories about his life as a Police Officer and Private Investigator before he retired. He would always apologize for "bothering me" when he got ready to leave, for which I told him he never was. Last time he stopped by we had a little longer talk than normal. When he got ready to leave he said, "You know I love you to death, don't ya?" And I said, Yea I do. His death was such a shock to me and my staff. Jake was one of the few residents that become friends during their time living here. He will be missed by us all.

“ As Jake's accountant and more importantly a friend, he will certainly be missed by me. We had so many discussions over the years and as "hard" as he wanted people to think he was I knew a man that would do anything to help you out if he could. He cared more than people know, he just had a hard time communicating. I will truly miss our discussions (and arguments) that only real friends can have.
